

SISTER OF MOKENA MAN FIRE VICTIM

MRS. IDA GRUEHN MEETS TRAGIC DEATH IN HOME

Trapped by fire in her second floor flat at the rear of 222 Wisconsin street in Chicago early Wednesday morning, Mrs. Ida Gruehn, sister of Elmer Benson of Mokena, was burned to death despite efforts of other occupants of the building to rescue her. She was 45 years old.

Her body was found near a window by firemen of the 3rd battalion, under the command of Chief Thomas Cody.

Five persons, occupants of the first-floor flat in the two-story brick building in which Mrs. Gruehn lived, were forced to leap to safety through an alley window, and more than eighty persons who resided in the large rooming house located on the front of the lot at that address were driven to the street by smoke. One was assisted down a ladder from his third-floor room by firemen, and two others were helped down the smoke-filled stairways.

Frank Hunnicutt, who resided in the flat below Mrs. Gruehn's, gave police and firemen a vivid account of his rescue of his family and of his attempt to save Mrs. Gruehn.

Awakened by Screams

"I was awakened by Mrs. Gruehn's screams and by the cries of Frank, my 6-year-old son," Hunnicutt said. "By that time the flames had eaten up the one stairway which was the only way out of the building from the second floor. I jumped from a side window to the ground, then assisted my wife and two children out."

"We could see Mrs. Gruehn at the window and she screamed for help. I yelled to her to jump, but I guess she was afraid. Then I tried to find a ladder, but couldn't. After screaming three times she disappeared."

Dog Found Beside Body

Firemen entering Mrs. Gruehn's flat after the fire found her white Spitz dog, Sissy, dead on the floor beside her body. Mrs. Gruehn's husband, John Gruehn, is in Phoenix Arizona, for his health.

Am. Institute Laundry Cleans Up Mokena Orioles

Our boys were taken to the cleaners, and how!

Leaving all kidding aside, it was a good game and full of pep all the way. Geo. Haenline started the pitching job for Mokena, but it just wasn't his day. Geo. Lauffer relieved him in the third frame after the Joliet boys banged out 7 hits for 6 runs.

Dodo kept them in their place from then on. But for a costly error in the 7th, the score would not have changed. It just was their day to get the breaks. Here's hoping we get them next Sunday.

When dese guys walked on de field with AIL on der shirts, I got a notion dey come from a brewery and couldn't spell ALE. After I talked wid them for a while, I tink AIL means sick like my aunt.

R. I. Raises New Lenox Crossing

The Rock Island railroad crossing west of the depot in New Lenox which has been a dangerous one due to the abrupt drop from the pavement to the tracks which were much lower than the paving, has been much improved the past week. The tracks have been raised 10 inches at this crossing. The brick sidewalk from the crossing east to the depot is also being raised up.

Transportation Big School Problem In Tinley Park

For the past two weeks, strenuous efforts were made to obtain a reduction in the cost of transportation for school children in Tinley Park attending high school in other townships. No satisfactory price could be arrived at. It seems that the bus companies cannot afford to operate a bus for less than the charge stipulated. The lowest possible fare from Tinley Park to Thornton high school amounting to $4.00 for 25 rides. This would necessitate an expenditure of about $6.00 per month for each student.

This is entirely too high a cost for most families, especially if they have more than one child attending high school.

During the course of this investigation, some very interesting facts were brought to light. It was discovered that many of the towns in the surrounding townships are provided with a financial contribution to provide transportation for children attending high school when there is no such school in their own town. This contribution comes from the township branch of the county school system.

Why is Tinley Park deprived of such privileges? The matter will be investigated by the Civic Club.

Frankfort Pastor Returns From Trip

Rev. Geo. Gerhold and family of Frankfort, have just returned from a trip to the Black Hills in Wyoming.

They report having had a very pleasant trip. Rev. Gerhold states that a trip of this kind is wonderful because of the beautiful scenery and points of interest seen. They viewed the wonderful work of the sculptors who are carving the faces of the three leading statesmen of our country. These faces are being carved out of the rock on the side of the mountains. So far it has taken six years and will take three more before it is completed.

Rev. Gerhold states the crop conditions are, in general, poor. Deserted of homes may be seen in many places in the Dakotas. They spent two days with Rev. Gerhold's brother at Watertown, S. Dakota.

Steal Hot Wires From Electric Line Near Mokena

We often hear the expression that certain thieves steal everything but a hot stove, but here is a case where the thieves stole a hot wire right from the electric light line.

About three o'clock last Saturday morning, Mr. Rabinov, residing south of Mokena discovered that his electric clock had stopped but thought the line trouble might be the cause which it was. About five o'clock the same morning, Fred Yunker, a neighboring farmer, saw a truck standing in the Rabinov lane with a roll of wire and several men on it. The truck suddenly disappeared. Later it was discovered that the copper wire on the live electric line had been cut off and stolen.

About 140 pounds of wire was taken which at the current junk market price of 10 cents a pound, did not yield much profit to the thieves.

It is evident that the thieves must have been well acquainted in the art of handling live wires for the wires carried 23000 volts of electricity. No trace has been found of the wire thieves.

Tinley Swamps Evergreen 8-0

Again Pat Homerding and Company turned back Evergreen Park. This time by an 8-0 count with Pat only giving up three scattered hits. Tinley tightened their hold on second place in the Southwest League by virtue of this victory and are pressing closer to the leading Worth team.

The local lads, playing the game on their home lot, wasted little time in putting the game safely away when they bunched hits in the first frame to score six times. A feature of this run spree was Imhoff's two singles.

With this handy lead to work with, Homerding proceeded to fan eleven of the opposing batsmen while Evergreen only once managed to put a man in scoring position.

"Ticklish Business" Goes Over Big In Palos Park

The play "Ticklish Business" as presented by the Young People's Forum of the Palos Park Community church under the direction of Chic Perkins King, Wednesday and Thursday evenings of this week was a great success.

Each player was an artist in their part.

The chorus of young people was very picturesque and their voices blended nicely.

We must not forget to give praise to the pajama chorus, the little tots who were scared on going, to bed and thought they heard a bear. But they found comfort in their prayer when they asked the Lord to chase away that naughty bear.

He dropped to his knees and touched it. Sticky! He flashed his light on it. Sniffed. Turpentine? He sank down on his heels and choked back a shout of laughter. He had been fooled by red paint.

How had it come here? What was that dark heap beyond it? Overalls! Blue denim overalls still warm from the wearer's body. The driver of the car he had heard a few moments ago must have shed them before he left the garage. Why had he worn them?

Mark projected and rejected explanations with lightning speed. The man who had shimmied from the balcony had come from the room where the scenery was being painted. Wasn't the roof of the cottage on the backdrop red? Why the shower? Why the shave? Was it he who had removed the key from the door of the storeroom tonight? But that man had disappeared via the connecting door, presumably into Look-out House.

He flashed a dim light over the white cover. More red! A clumsy X. "Make X on cover when—"

The words on the scrap of paper in the storeroom were explained. "X marks the spot where the body was found."

The sentence flashed into Mark's mind as if set in electric lights. Body! Jed was missing! Perhaps his body had been dumped inside the limousine!

He set his heel on the thought. He would imagine a horror like that. That infernal cross probably meant nothing, but he'd take a look-see so that he wouldn't ask himself later, "Why didn't I?"

Soundlessly he reached the other side of the limousine. The disarranged cover which left the door exposed revealed also a license plate. All set to go! He flashed his light inside. Something long, something rounded on the rear seat was covered with an automobile robe.

Dread paralyzed Mark's hand for what seemed to him hours; then with a muttered imprecation he thrust it under the robe. The silver! Nothing but the silver! That X on the white cover was a sign that it had been moved from his house. Who had moved it? That was easy. It had been removed while he and Jed had been at the Reburns by the man who had driven away. Sure of plenty of time he had stopped for a shower and shave. Moving the loot to the garage had been his share of the job. Would a pal appear to drive the stuff off?

"He will, and here he is!" Mark muttered, as the frosty gravel outside the garage crunched faintly.

A key in the lock! Not a minute to waste. Where should he go? Inside Brooke's town car! The breaks were with him. It wasn't locked.

The garage door was sliding back. Mark saw a patch of sky. He banged his forehead as he plunged headfirst into the sedan, and saw a million stars. His head spun as he crouched in the space left by the turned back seat and drew the door shut without latching it. He held it in place as barely breathing he listened.

Footsteps on the cement floor! Cautious footsteps. A light on the ceiling! Suppose it should flash into the town car? It had stopped. Whoever it was, was taking his time.

An engine turning over! Was some darn fool starting a car with the garage door closed? Mark raised his head turtle-fashion. No, the door was open. He might have known it. Was it likely that the bandit would allow himself to be bumped off by carbon monoxide? Not that bad boy. He had too much at stake.

He must follow. How? He couldn't trail in another car. He would be heard. Could he hang on to the empty trunk-rack? That was an idea. He would follow the limousine out of the garage, slip into the shadow of a shrub when the man went back to close the door, then grab the trunk-rack when the car started again. A stunt, but he'd make a stab at it. If he were to hold the man now he would learn nothing of his destination.

He cautiously tiptoed after the limousine. He was safe behind the shrubs when the driver returned and noiselessly closed the garage door. A soft hat was drawn low over his eyes, but Mark knew him. Henri.

He was behind the wheel again! The limousine was coasting down the incline! Mark crouched as he ran after it. As the engine started, he drew himself carefully to the trunk-rack. He barely breathed. Had the driver felt a jar? Evidently not. He was increasing speed. He was not headed for the causeway. He was going in the opposite direction. What did that mean?

After spinning past old landmarks, the car slowed down and stopped. Mark saw the white cottage. The filling-station. He must not be seen here. Surely the driver would make contact with someone inside before he left the limousine. Henri stepped out of the car. He stopped as if to make sure he was not observed.

Mark slipped off the trunk-rack. He was cramped and stiff. He hobbled rather than walked into a deep purple shadow cast by a pine. He could see the cottage. He held his breath as Henri gently turned the knob of the front door and entered. What would he do next? Come back to the limousine? What a chance to grab him.

What was he doing inside the house? He was taking his time. The door was opening again! Mark hardly breathed. A man slipped out. His hat was pulled down over his eyes. He slunk along in the shadows. Reached the shore road. Ran on the dried grass which bordered it as if pursued by furies.

Had that been Henri? Had he delivered his message? Had he been warned to beat it? Couldn't have been a fight inside. No loud voices. Had the limousine with the silver been left for someone else to drive away?

Someone else! What a break! What a break! He would drive it back and park it in his garage—no, that wouldn't do, he would leave it with Mike Cassidy. Mike was as dependable as the sun.

He stole from the shadow of the pine. With every faint crunch of his feet on the frosty ground his blood stopped running. Could he reach the limousine before someone came? Only a few feet more. He was behind the wheel. With a hand stiff from cold he touched the self-starter. Hang it! Wouldn't you know the motor would back-fire! A light! In the front dormer! He had wakened someone! He hadn't a moment to lose.

With his ears strained to detect pursuit, with his eyes roaming from side to side, Mark shot the car ahead. He went in an opposite direction from that taken by Henri—the man who had burned up the road making his getaway from the white cottage had been Henri—he wouldn't run the chance of overtaking him. It seemed years before he reached Mike Cassidy's garage at the entrance to the causeway, hours before he could rouse the man, before he partially opened the door.

"Let me in quick, Mike," he whispered to the blinking, cursing proprietor, who was gripping something that gleamed dark and blue and ugly in a hairy, ham-bone fist. "It's only you, Mr. Mark! Thought it might be a hold-up."

Cassidy's lower jaw swung like a gate on loose hinges. He slipped the automatic into his pocket before he rolled back the garage door. "Where can I hide this?"

Cassidy pointed. Not until the limousine was stowed behind a motley collection of broken-down cars did Mark Trent explain.

"I've just rescued the family silver, Mike. The yarn I have to tell you will beat any of the thrillers you get over the radio. Not afraid to keep the car here, are you?"

Cassidy's red-rimmed eyes grew moist. He wiped his nose on a shabby coat sleeve.

"I ain't afraid to do nothing for you, Mr. Mark. You an' your family give me my start; sometimes you've kept me goin' when I didn't know where the next meal was comin' from. I felt mean when I let my Maggie go to work for Mrs. Hunt who treated you so bad, but we needed the money somethin' terrible, so she took the job, though it was at that new fillin' station that's tryin' to put me out of business."

A telephone rang. The two men stared at one another. Mark's blood turned to ice. Cassidy whispered: "Holy mackerel! Who's callin' this time of night? Have they traced you and the silver this quick? Perhaps there's a gang after you!"

Mark nodded toward the telephone. "Answer!" His muscles tensed as he listened.

"Cassidy's garage—You, Maggie! What t'll—Stop blubberin'—What! Who?—I can't hear, you're cryin' so—Something terrible?—Never mind, never mind. I'll call police headquarters—You've got to stay there, girl, till I get Bill Harrison. If anyone comes, don't talk. Don't talk!—Sure, I'll come, just as soon as I get the police."

"Mike! What's happened?" Cassidy's face was ashen as he shook Mark's hand from his arm. "Wait!"

He dialed. He spoke into the transmitter.

"Someone's hurt bad at the white cottage—that new filling station on the point—Mike Cassidy talkin'—I got to go. You don't understand—my daughter's there—All right. I'll wait here."

He hung up and wiped a grimy hand across his sweat-beaded forehead.

"That was my girl, Maggie, who called."

"Talk, man, talk! What's happened?"

"Someone hurt bad."

"Who?"

"I couldn't make out."

"Someone hurt at the white cottage! But I was there not more than ten minutes ago, Mike."

"If I was you I wouldn't say that, Mr. Mark. It wasn't just hurtin'. I was breakin' it easy. Someone's dead."

CHAPTER IX

"Don't move! I've got you covered!"

In obedience to the hoarse warning, Sam and Brooke Reyburn stood as if turned to stone in the dark hall of Lookout House.

Lights flared. Brooke stared incredulously. Was that Jed Stewart with his hand on the switch glaring at them with wide dilated eyes, with his mouth open as if he had just swallowed a salt wave? That was a flashlight he was pointing at them, not a pistol. It was Jed Stewart without his coat, with his black bow tie under one ear, with only one shoe on.

"For the love of Mike, Jed Stewart, perhaps you'll tell me why you're holding us up in our own house? Why this Public Enemy No. 1 touch?" Sam demanded.

Stewart blinked. "What are you two doing wandering round this house half dressed at this time of night?"

"Stop shouting, Jed. You'll have Lucette down here," Sam said. "Come into the living room and tell us what you're doing in this house, Jed."

"Let's go to the kitchen instead, more likely to stabilize our emotions," Brooke suggested. "I'll make cocoa and we'll scramble eggs. Jed must need food after the late excitement—he's fairly twitching with it—and I feel hollow to my toes. Come on, Sam."

"Sounds okay to me. I'm a growing boy, I need lots of nutriment. You'd better eat, Brooke; you didn't touch a thing when we came back from rehearsal. I'll run up and get a couple of bathrobes. Take these, Jed." He kicked off his slippers. "I'll put on shoes upstairs."

"Perhaps You'll Tell Us How You Got In and Why, Jed?"

Sam followed her into the kitchen. "Sam can be speedy when he wants to be," she admitted, as her brother entered with a lurid bathrobe over his pajamas and another all red and green stripes which he flung at Stewart.

"There you are, m'lady."

"Bring the milk, eggs, butter and bacon from the icebox, Sam. Toss me that apron, Jed, the big white one—that's right. Toast some bread, Sammy."

Soon Sam sniffed. "Doesn't the bacon smell dandy! Here you are, folks." He arranged thin, crisp strips around a mound of fluffy scrambled eggs. "You and Jed sit down, Brooke, and I'll bring the cocoa after I find the marshmallows to drop into the cups."

Brooke slipped off the apron and waited until Sam had served steaming hot cocoa with a little melting white island floating in each cup and helped himself lavishly to scrambled eggs and bacon, before, with elbows on the porcelain table, chin on her clasped hands, she suggested:

"Now that the shock of discovering us roaming round in our own house has somewhat worn off, perhaps you'll tell us how you got in and why, Jed?"

Stewart leaned back in his chair with the air of a man whose appetite has been abundantly satisfied. (TO BE CONTINUED)

Snakes Have Quick Tongues
Garter snakes are among the commonest of our native reptiles. The quick, darting forked red tongue gathers many insects for food, which together with frogs, toads, salamanders and worms, forms its principal diet. It is perfectly harmless and of great economic value. It hibernates below the frost line in soft mud or sand and emerges in early spring after being awakened by warming suns.

Lesson for September 5

GOD REQUIRES SOCIAL JUSTICE.

LESSON TEXT—Leviticus 19:1-18, 32-37. GOLDEN TEXT—As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise. Luke 6:31.

PRIMARY TOPIC—At Harvest Time. JUNIOR TOPIC—At Harvest Time. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Championing the Rights of Others. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—My Responsibility for Social Justice.

Labor Day—in this year of our Lord 1937—looks out upon a world deeply divided in opinions of what is right and what is wrong in the relationship between capital and labor. Political and economic leaders are talking much of social justice, of a planned economy in which all shall have a full share of the products of labor. Surely, we would all agree that there should be only kindness and justice in all such dealings of man with man. But how to accomplish that result in a world of selfishness and sin, that indeed is the question.

Unfortunately, many of those in the church who have greatly stressed social relationships have forgotten that the true foundation for such teaching and living is the preaching of the gospel of redemption. In reaction to their impossible position, others who have faithfully preached the necessity of regeneration have forgotten to stress the need of the expression of regenerated life in the social relationships of man. We need God-given balance, with a proper reflection of gospel truth in honest and helpful living. God wants his people to show that they belong to him by

I. Providing for the Poor and Needy (vv. 9, 10, 14, 15).

When Jesus said, "Ye have the poor always with you" (Matt. 26:11), he referred to one of the responsibilities which thoughtful and considerate men have always gladly borne, but which has been a constant problem to both individuals and nations. We have dealt with it in our day on a broad and supposed scientific basis, but those who are closest to it are quick to admit that we have even now an imperfect solution. In the days of Israel the poor were fed by the purposeful leaving of gleanings in the field—which the needy were free to gather as their own. Thus they had the joy of helping themselves even as they were being helped by others, and, in the final analysis, by God himself.

II. Guarding Another's Reputation (vv. 16-18).

Gossip is a destructive means of breaking down the good standing of another. It is a sin all too common in our day, even within the circle of God's own people. Tale-bearing and evil-speaking are a blight on our social and religious life. We should put them away.

Akin to this common and awful sin is the bearing of grudges and the seeking for revenge, neither of which serves any good purpose.

III. Honoring the Aged (v. 32).

Old-age pensions undoubtedly have their place in our complicated social life, but it is evident that they would be entirely unnecessary if men and women had in the fear of God honored "the hoary head" and "the face of the old man," even as God gave command to Israel.

IV. Loving the Stranger (vv. 33, 34).

The man who knows what it is to have been a stranger, and to meet with love and protecting care, should never forget to go and do likewise. Living, as many of us do, in great cities makes this somewhat of a problem, and yet one sometimes wonders whether the bustling city is not often kinder to the stranger than the little community, which makes him feel like an "outsider."

V. Being Honest in Business (vv. 11-13, 35, 36).

No stealing, no false swearing, no defrauding, no withholding of wages, for all these things dishonor or "profane the name of thy God."

A good motto to hang up behind the counter or over the desk in a business house is found in the words of verses 35 and 36. False bottoms, trick scales, short measure—oh, yes, they are against the city ordinance, and you will be fined if you are caught. But remember, they are also an abomination in the sight of the Lord.

The closing verse of our lesson reiterates that important truth. In carrying out the tenets of social justice we are not simply being humane and kind. We are observing the statutes and ordinances of the Eternal One, him who says, "I am Jehovah."

Being One in Faith

It is good to know that in whatever country we are found, and under whatever sky, we are, through faith in the divine Saviour, members in the same body, sheep in the same fold, children of one home.

Pay Up Our Debts

Debt comes under the eighth commandment. It hangs a millstone round the neck of the man or woman who incurs it. It corrodes honesty.

They're Cinches to Sew

YES, the sewing bug will get you, if you don't watch out, young lady! And when it does there will be a hum in your life (and we don't mean head noises). Right now is the time to begin; right here is the place to get your inspiration. So all together, girls: it's sew, sew, sew-your-own!

Inspiration Number 1.
The vivacious model at the left is the number 1 piece for your new autumn advance. It calls for taffeta, embellished, as you might expect, with grosgrain. You may use vivid colors too, Milady, for Fashion has gone color mad this fall. Reds of every hue, bright blues, lavender, warm browns, all are being featured in smart avenue shops along the Rue de la Paix.

Morning Frock.
For most of us, each day demands that a little work be done. Sew-Your-Own appreciates this and the need for frocks that are practical, pretty, and easy to keep that way, hence the new utility frock in the center. Five pieces are its sum and total; seven mornings a week its cycle. Any tub-we'll fabric will do nicely as the material—try one version in printed rayon.

Tailored Charm.
The waistcoat used to be a gentleman's identification, but, alas, like many another smart idea, womankind has copied it. Here you see an attractive example of this modern contraband. Not only does it have suavity, but it is entirely feminine, as well. The exquisite waist line, sweet little collar, and puff sleeves, make this a number you can't afford to pass up.

The Patterns.
Pattern 1363 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 40 bust). Size 14 requires 3 3/4 yards of 39-inch material, plus 18 yards of ribbon for trimming, as pictured.

Pattern 1354 is designed for sizes 34 to 46. Size 36 requires 4 1/2 yards of 35-inch material.

Pattern 1252 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 3 3/4 yards of 39-inch material.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Uncle Phil Says:

The Mania of 1937

There have always been manias in the world. A conspicuous one now is the frantic desire to go somewhere quickly and lose your life at it.

Many a man pulls down his character in an effort to build up his reputation.

There are people who end a conversation with you sooner than you want them to, because they have a sensitive fear they are boring you. Undeceive them at once.

Their Influence

A self-made man has a good deal of the tincture of his boy friends.

Ignorance is not always absence of knowledge. It is harboring thoughts in which there isn't any sense.

People who never want to hear criticism of anything are as fatiguing as those who indulge in nothing else.

Trinity Lutheran school is operated by Trinity Evangelical Lutheran church to give its children a thorough education from the Christian point of view.

To the end of a thorough Christian education, the school course consists of formal instruction in the Bible truths according to the Lutheran Catechism, the Bible History, and the Bible; careful guidance of the pupil's growth in Christian character and behavior; and thorough instruction in the secular subjects essential to effective participation in home and community. The secular subjects are taught from the Christian point of view.

The Lutheran Church of the Missouri Synod has always recognized the need and the value of a thorough religious training for its children.
We hold that whatever makes a child a good Christian makes him a good citizen.

Although the school is maintained by Trinity Lutheran Church for the training of Lutheran church members, its doors are open to other children whose parents wish to provide them with the training which this school offers. Such parents are requested to support the aims of the school for their children by cooperating with the school and being in accord with its principles and methods. A nominal tuition is required for training children whose parents are not members of Trinity church.

"Christ Jesus" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon on Sunday, August 29.

The Golden Text was, "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son: that all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father" (John 5:22, 23).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world" (1 John 4:14).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy:
"Jesus established what he said by demonstration, thus making his acts of higher importance than his words.
He proved what he taught. This is the Science of Christianity" (p.
473).

Tell Him What You've Found to Be True

● Tell him of the value, educationally, he will derive from reading this noted feature writer's historical articles as they appear regularly in this paper. He will probably say: "Sure, I like history, Pop, but..." But too often it's ponderous and drained of the vitality that makes history the stirring story that it is. Then reveal to him the skill with which this man makes dramatic phases of his country's history read like lively fiction.

● Show him that Mr. Watson's articles sometimes digress to other fields of American interest—to popular science, sports, the fine arts, industry, literature—to developments that will MAKE history... but read like romance.

You can feel secure in this guidance of your child's reading because Elmo Scott Watson's articles always are authoritative and are based upon the most painstaking research. In adsubject that has been adopted as a textbook by leading journalism schools throughout the nation.

HEY MOTORISTS LISTEN!

PHANTOM PENNIES

By THE LITTLE ENGINEER

THE motorist who thinks he's saving money by buying cheap oil and gasoline is simply kidding himself.

Actually the cost of fuel and lubricant in a season's motoring is a minor expense and the difference in price between the best and the worst is a trifling matter in money but a serious one in the effect on your car.

Anyone who can afford to own a car can afford the ultimate saving and the better performance provided by the regular use of the higher grades of advertised oils and lubricated gasolines. He can also afford a set of cool looking inexpensive slip covers to protect the upholstery. He can also afford to have his car washed at intervals to save the finish, to have all bolts and nuts tightened, to have the wiring and lights checked and to have his battery replenished.

In fact, he cannot afford not to do these little things. He'll find out why when it comes time to sell the car.

"Blackbeard"

Edward "Blackbeard" Teach, America's most notable native pirate, died in 1718 with his boots on. A British officer, Lieut. Robert Maynard, cut him to ribbons in a duel at Blackbeard's lair in Ocracoke Inlet, North Carolina, in order to get a $500 reward posted by the government. Left to mourn Blackbeard were 14 wives, the youngest sixteen, and the British royal governor, Eden, who shared profits of the pirate's expeditions. Teach, like Bonnet, Morgan and other pirates bold, was of an aristocratic family. He had brothers in the British service who were dutybound to shoot him on sight.

Nazareth, in Galilee

The town of Nazareth, in Galilee, had a military history for many years in medieval days. Mohammedans captured it early in the first years of their faith, but never vanquished the faith of its inhabitants. The Crusaders in 1100 retook it and made it the see city of the diocese of Scythopolis. Afterwards it was captured by the Mohammedans, and again recaptured, until in 1203, on again taking possession of it, the followers of the Prophet massacred all the inhabitants, who were in any way connected with Christianity.

ANIMAL AND PET PICTURES

The very fact that animals and pets don't pose makes them ideal photographic subjects.

FROM household pets to giants of the jungles—animals are ideal subjects for photographers. They don't pose; they don't act. You can snap them in natural, undirected action and that is just the reason their pictures create so much interest.

To get good pictures of any animal the first essential is patience. It is quite possible that the family dog will stand up obligingly for you on command, but in picturing all other animals you'll find it necessary to wait for the picture you want.

And this brings us to the question—what do you want in an animal picture?

You may prefer to snap a kitten as it plays with a string or a dog wrestling with a stick.

Domestic animals, of course, offer few real camera difficulties, for you can get them to come where the light is right. Open shade, on a bright day, will be found best. As for shutter speed (if your camera has variable speeds), you'll need 1/25th of a second or faster, to catch fleeting poses and expressions. Unless the light is exceptional, better work with the lens wide open.

To snap less controllable animals—squirrels, birds, and such—you'll need greater patience and cunning. Much depends on background and on your distance from the subject. At more than ten feet, for example, a squirrel becomes almost invisible UNLESS it is sharply revealed on a branch, with the sky for background. Obviously, you'll need to use a fast shutter; squirrels move too swiftly for slow snaps.

The zoo can be a happy hunting ground, too. In many cases, you'll be able to shoot through or over the bars of cages, obtaining clear, unobstructed snaps.

Use a modern, color sensitive film. You'll need all the detail you can get and the utmost in color value rendering.

As previously announced, it is not contemplated in the present plan that Commonwealth Edison Company should acquire direct ownership of the physical properties of Public Service Company of Northern Illinois. Neither is the merging of the operating organizations and personnel contemplated.

Leap Year Proposing

The tradition that on leap years maids could do their own courting is so old that its origin is somewhat obscure, but apparently Margaret of Norway, who became queen of Scotland, started the belief in 1288 A. D. Her decree gave the privilege to maids of both high and low degree, and any bachelor or eligible young man who turned down a maid's proposal could be fined.

Auto Races Feature At Mazon Fair

The Grundy County Fair Association announces one of the largest lists of entries ever to take part in automobile races at the Mazon Fair grounds.

Thirty-four cars have already entered with more expected. Among them are such prominent drivers as Shorty Sorensen of Waukegan, winner of last winter's indoor championship of the middle west, Harry McQuin of Indianapolis last year will soon be flying around the little oval track.

The track has been given two coats of oil and is reported to be very fast. Thousands of automobile race fans witness the races at the Mazon Fair each year.

The Fair opened Sept. 3rd and will run to and including Sept. 6. The Adam's rodeo will be a feature on Saturday.

One of the largest entries of live stock ever to enter will be on the grounds when the Fair opens Saturday.

SAMMY AND BLACKY BOTH TALK AT ONCE

Two tongues at once are one too many. And better 'twere there were not any.

WHICH means that when two people try to talk at the same time it is very unpleasant for themselves and even more unpleasant for others who may have to listen to them. When Blacky the Crow came flying out from deep in the Green Forest so excited that he was cawing at the top of his voice Sammy Jay had at once flown to meet him. Now, Sammy was just as excited, and he was screaming at the top of his lungs. You see,

Of Course, All the Little People Within Hearing Hurried Over to Find Out What It All Meant.

he knew that Blacky had found the stranger who had so excited him. Now perhaps the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows would believe him and no longer think him crazy.

But they didn't! No, sir, they didn't! Instead they thought that Blacky the Crow had gone crazy, too. Never was there heard a worse racket than Sammy and Blacky made as they each tried to talk louder and faster than the other. Neither was listening to what the other was saying, which in itself was very impolite, even if they were cousins. Worse still, each kept interrupting the other, and, you know, there is nothing more impolite than to interrupt when another is speaking. But neither seemed to mind in the least. Each kept right on talking and growing more and more excited.

Of course, all the little people within hearing hurried over to find out what it all meant. But they couldn't understand at all what Sammy and Blacky were talking about. You see, Sammy and Blacky interrupted each other so often that all that those who were listening could make out was that there was a great big stranger in the Green Forest, a stranger who wore black fur and was as big as Farmer Brown's boy. Now, none of the little people knew of any one as big as Farmer Brown's boy unless it was another boy or a man. But Sammy and Blacky said that the stranger was not a man. So all their neighbors shook their heads sadly and said: "They're crazy," and then again shook their heads sadly. "Too bad," said Jimmy Skunk.

"I always thought Blacky was smart, very smart, but there certainly is something the matter with him now."

"Yes, sah, there certainly is," said Uncle Billy Possum. "Something's wrong with both Br'er Jay and Br'er Crow. They're foolish in their heads."

"Do you suppose it's catching?" asked Bobby Coon. "You know, Sammy Jay had it first and now Blacky has it."

"What's all this fuss about?" demanded a new voice. It was Peter Rabbit's. He was all out of breath, he had hurried so. You see, he had been way up in the Old Orchard, when he heard the screaming of Sammy and Blacky and he had started right away, for, you know, Peter would feel dreadful to miss anything that was going on.

"Nothing, only Blacky the Crow is just as crazy as his cousin, Sammy Jay," replied Jimmy Skunk. "Blacky says he has seen the same stranger in the Green Forest that upset Sammy so. Just listen to those two birds! Did you ever hear anything like it? I'm going home." With that Jimmy Skunk turned his back in disgust and started up the Crooked Little Path that comes down the hill.

Bobby Coon and Uncle Billy Possum started for their homes, and Danny Meadow Mouse began to run along one of his little paths to get as far as possible from such a noise. But Peter Rabbit suddenly sat up with his eyes popping right out of his head. He had just remembered the strange tracks he had seen in the snow deep in the Green Forest just at the end of winter. Could it be that they were made by the stranger who had so excited Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow?

HOME PAINTING

THE last few years have seen great changes in paints, and particularly in enamel and varnish. Formerly, enamel and varnish required many hours, and even several days, for drying. Now they dry hard in four hours or so. More than this, they are harder and far more resistant to heat, moisture, and chipping than the older types. Paints of many kinds are also quick drying. There is, of course, a very great advantage in this. Ten years ago repainting might put a room out of commission for a week; today, walls and woodwork can be completely refinished between breakfast and dinnertime.

These quick drying finishes are so easily applied that they are coming into very common use. For example, take the refinishing of a set of kitchen furniture. The first step is washing with soapsuds containing a little ammonia or washing soda to take off all traces of grease, followed by rinsing with clear water. When the furniture has dried, any glossiness of the old finish should be dulled by rubbing with sandpaper. This will also smooth the edges of chipped places and of cracks. One coat of enamel is usually all that is needed for complete refinishing, to be followed, if needed, by touches of a contrasting color when the first coat is thoroughly dry.

In painting chairs, they should be turned upside down, and the legs finished first, the under parts of a table are also finished more easily when the table is turned upside down.

For a good job, the mixture in the can should be thoroughly blended before using. With a small stick or a putty knife, the solid mass that has settled to the bottom of the can should be stirred into the liquid, so that the whole comes to an even consistency. I think that more troubles with painting come from improper mixing than from almost anything else. The floor should be covered with newspapers to catch spatters. The enamel or other finish should be brushed out with a few quick strokes to spread it evenly, and to prevent the forming of "runs" and of drops.

When work is interrupted for a few hours or overnight, the can should be tightly closed to prevent the contents from drying and the formation of a skin on top. The brush should be wiped off, rinsed in turpentine, wiped again and wrapped in waxed paper. Otherwise it will harden.

MEN

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

TWO-FOOTED men have gone their way,
Unwanted in this softer day.
But what I'd like to see again
At least is some two-footed men.
For many men I come across
Have one foot that's a total loss.
For many men each day I've seen
Who stand upon one foot and lean.

Some seek to lean upon a "class"
To bring "equality" to pass,
Some lean upon the promises
Of Townsend talking through his fez,

Some lean upon the President,
Some lean upon the "goverment,"
Although they own the whole machine
And tax one foot so one can lean.

Yet all the men who have pulled through Stood not one foot but on two.
Not one success I ever saw Leaned on some bureau or some law.

That's why I claim we need again
A nation of two-footed men.
(That's not the worst that I have seen:

For some, alas, sit down and lean.)

THERE are a surprising number of people in this world who have far better than average mental equipment and yet have difficulty in getting anywhere simply because they haven't the concentration essential to completed accomplishment.

Such individuals, unfortunately, are always conceiving really brilliant ideas which are practical in every way. But, somehow or other, they are able to carry them just so far and no farther. Indications of this deficiency are always found in the fourth finger and its telltale characteristics.

The Finger of Unstable Mentality.

Several distinct characteristics mark the fourth finger of this type: (1) Shortness, (2) straightness, (3) fullness, (4) pronounced taper. Such a finger is usually well but not over fleshed. The points are smooth, combining with the taper to give the finger a somewhat peglike appearance. The nail tip is gracefully rounded, with full oval nail, symmetrically set.

With fingers pressed together the tip is found usually falling midway of the length of the third finger. With hand extended wide the finger stands far away from the third finger. Under backward pressure the entire finger is found to be over-flexible.

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building
Washington, D. C.

Washington.—The Supreme court of the United States has a new member, and to that extent, President Roosevelt has succeeded in reorganizing the highest court in the land. With the nomination by the President of Sen. Hugo L. Black, Alabama Democrat, and confirmation of that nomination by the senate, we find a Supreme court that stands for liberal interpretations of the Constitution by a vote of six to three on most questions.

Court Now Liberal

While it is important, of course, to know that Senator Black, the new justice, is nearly 100 per cent New Dealer, it is much more important to the country as a whole to think of Mr. Black hereafter as being fully aware of the reasons why he was selected to the lifetime job at $20,000 per year. It is likewise important to remember the reasons why Mr. Black was selected when one examines the so-called balance of power in the Supreme court.

It seems to me that Mr. Black will enter upon his duties next October under one of the gravest handicaps that ever was set upon the shoulders of a Supreme court justice. Because of this handicap, and because of the reasons lying back of his appointment, I greatly fear that Senator Black can never be a great member of a great tribunal.

In the first instance, his record in the senate, covering a period of ten years, has demonstrated to most everyone that he has a keen mind, but the fact remains, and I think it cannot be disputed, the new justice lacks the poise which always has been an attribute of outstanding judges. I hope he has the qualities that will enable him to grow and become a good justice from the legal standpoint; I hope this for the sake of the country as a whole and for the sake of the judicial structure of our government. But after observing him as an independent writer over the last ten years I think I would be unfair to those who read these lines if I did not characterize Mr. Black's as a decidedly mediocre appointment.

Again, the fact that nearly all Washington observers and a very great number of officials do not expect much legal wisdom from the new justice is traceable more to the conditions under which Mr. Black received the honor than to Mr. Black himself.

Let us examine the reasons that lie back of Mr. Roosevelt's selection of Mr. Black. In this case, as in the case of many lesser appointments, the motives, the politics, the underlying objectives have not been stressed anywhere. In order to understand the situation, it is necessary to review several years of history on one line and it is likewise necessary to examine various incidents marking Mr. Black's career in the senate. Out of this maze of detail, certain significant and more or less definite conclusions appear.

Along the one side of the examination we find Senator Black consistently supporting President Roosevelt's New Deal programs wherever and whenever he found them. We note as well intolerance on his part for those persons and those arguments running counter to New Deal policies. Thirdly, we cannot overlook various senate investigations conducted by Senator Black for we know that in most of these he was carrying out orders from the White House. That is, Senator Black was engaged in expeditions of smear, of muckraking, and in needless exposure by way of senate investigations, in order that if there were flashbacks someone other than the President would be in the white light of criticism.

Casting aside many of the assaults on Mr. Black's personal record, and turning to the other phase of the situation that culminated in his selection for the court, it must be plain to anyone knowing all the facts that President Roosevelt had a definite purpose in selecting the Alabamian. This phase also requires a bit of review.

Court Split Party

When the President suddenly demanded that congress reorganize the Supreme court and make provision for the appointment of six new justices of his own choosing, he created an enormous split in the Democratic party. He alienated many sections of the South and at the same time provided many old-line southern Democrats with ammunition which they could use to justify their positions in opposing Mr. Roosevelt on many other phases of legislation.

I do not mean to say that all of the southern Democrats turned against the President because that is untrue. There were possibly a half dozen senators from the South and an equal proportion of representatives who are sticking by the President and will continue to support him. That fact, however, does not alleviate the condition.

Senator Black was among those who stayed with the President through thick and thin. He never was an exceedingly popular man among his colleagues. Add to this the capacity of using harsh language in the extreme and one finds that he was not the most popular choice among the senators for the job to which he has been elevated. From various quarters, therefore, I have heard observations to the effect that Mr. Roosevelt appointed Senator Black with full knowledge of the facts I have related. He could and did slap at some members of his own party for failing to go along with him on the court packing plan and some other New Deal legislation like the wages and hours program. He showed certain groups and cliques in the senate and house that he is boss.

Then, in selecting a man from the deep South undoubtedly the President figured it would be influential in pulling back to him some of the support which he certainly has lost among local politicians in the southern states. Views of this test of political strategy differ greatly, but whether he gains or whether he loses on that score, there certainly is ground for belief that the reasons were as I have given them.

There is also another reason for the appointment of Mr. Black. Of course, everyone realized that Mr. Roosevelt would name a man of New Deal leaning. Moreover, everyone recognized that it would be strictly a personal appointment as far as the President was concerned. So the stage was set for appointment of a man of more or less radical tendencies—but no one expected the choice that was made.

Now, the senate long has operated almost as a high class group. Every senator considers his colleagues with great deference and respect. This is senatorial courtesy. Does it not seem quite reasonable then, to consider that Mr. Roosevelt went into the senate to pick a new justice with the full realization that the nomination would be debated in gentlemanly fashion; that senatorial courtesy would tone down the barbs and the darts and the personal attacks that would probably obtain if the name of a private citizen were submitted? I cannot know the President's mind, obviously, yet I have heard these conclusions stated so many times that they cannot be wholly disregarded. New Dealers consider the appointment clever from the standpoint of senate debate, and those opposed to the New Deal called it a smart trick. So there is very little disagreement.

I called attention earlier to the effect of the conditions under which Mr. Black enters the court. I think examination of them is vital.

They are important for the reasons I have set down and they are important from another standpoint.

It is pure conjecture, of course, but I am going to mention the possibility that Senator Black's entry into the court membership may possibly create resentment among the other justices. Each of them will certainly know about all of the various undercurrents, the gossip, and the more or less obvious facts involved in the appointment.

I have been wondering then whether the other members of the court, even liberal members like Justices Stone, Brandeis, and Cardozo, may not feel that Mr. Roosevelt has subjected them to undignified terms. I mean by that, is there not a possibility of them feeling that the President is seeking to gain decisions along his own line of reasoning rather than on the basis of justice and law?

As I said, this is pure conjecture. Nevertheless, I think it will be agreed that it is a logical thought, because the Supreme court justices, after all, are just as human as you and anyone else.

Carrying this thought a little further, what will be the effect upon the old conservative members of the court like Justices McReynolds and Butler and Sutherland? Will they regard the Black appointment as a direct thrust at them personally? If they do, it seems to me the logical result would be to make them more conservative than they now are.

I do not mean to imply dishonesty or unfairness to any member of the court. I know some of them personally and I respect every one of them. I merely call attention to these things as among the possible results in the appointment of a man to the Supreme court who may have been not the worst appointment possible but surely, all conditions considered, it was far from the best.

Politically, the Black appointment is likely to enter into the 1938 congressional elections. There seems no way by which the matter can be avoided as an issue. It is only through those elections of senators and representatives that the people can express themselves, and nearly everyone agrees now that the name of Justice Black will enter into numerous state and district political battles.

'Way Back When

By JEANNE

GENERAL WAS SCHOOL TEACHER

SOMETIMES one small incident changes a whole life's trend, and leads to prominence beyond all previous dreams. We all recall one or two unexpected happenings in our own lives which changed their whole course.

John J. Pershing, who rose to be general of all the United States army, might have had an entirely different life had he not taken advantage of a lucky opportunity. He was born in 1860 at Laclede, Mo. His father was boss of a railroad gang and, later, a farmer. John quit school when he was thirteen to work on the farm, digging fence holes, herding sheep, planting corn, all the usual jobs that are the lot of a farm boy. Ambitious to be a lawyer, he studied night after night. In 1879, he got a job as teacher in Prairie Mount, Mo., and saved most of the $40 per month he received to study law at Kirksville Normal school.

Then came the incident which changed his whole life. Jack Pershing saw an advertisement announcing competitive examinations for West Point. He had only two weeks to prepare, but he won the appointment. At West Point he won prominence as president of his class and as first captain of the corps of cadets. Possessing the characteristics of a perfect soldier, his assignments after graduation into the army were marked with success. While a military instructor at the University of Nebraska, he resumed his law studies and took his degree. Since the army conducts its own military courts, this gave Pershing an opportunity to combine his business love with his soldierly success. When the World war broke out, he was made general of the U. S. army.

FAMED TENOR MIGHT HAVE BEEN A CLERK

SOMETIMES parents despair unnecessarily about their children. Just because a youngster shows no aptitude for the job his parents may choose for him is no indication that failure awaits him.

If John McCormack had followed the plans of his father he might have been a Catholic priest. The famous tenor was born in Athlone, Ireland, in 1884, fourth of eleven children. His father worked in the woolen mills of the town and the family was very poor. John attended the Catholic schools and was an excellent student, winning a scholarship to college. There he studied for the priesthood.

At an early age John McCormack's voice showed promise and at the age of nine he sang in a school entertainment. Music was not one of the subjects offered at college, and so John had no opportunity to receive training for his voice. It did not occur to him at that time that singing would be his profession. However, he did decide against becoming a priest, which must have been a hard blow for his father. But the man did not lack understanding and he encouraged the boy in his desire to become a civil service clerk. When John failed in the entrance examinations at the school where he would receive his training, and when given a second chance forgot the appointment, his father must have truly despaired.

Then it began to dawn on John McCormack that singing was his true vocation. He had loved to sing all his life. He went to Dublin and got a job in the Marlborough Street cathedral choir at $125 a year. He began to gain more and more recognition, sang for recordings of the Edison and Gramophone companies, and eventually became a star of opera. Today he is known the world over for his golden tenor.

7. Louis Casabianca was a French revolutionist and naval officer. At Aboukir bay, in 1798, he was in command of the Orient, which caught fire. He refused to quite his ship and his young son refused to desert him. This event is the basis for Mrs. Hemans' poem.

Removing Alcohol Stains From Furniture.—Alcohol stains on polished furniture may be removed by rubbing olive oil over the spot as soon as the alcohol is wiped off.

To Avoid Burns.—It is annoying as well as painful to burn your fingers when removing the lid from a hot pan. To avoid this keep a spring clothes peg on the stove and use this as a clip for picking up the lids.

LOADING RUBBER ON SMALL BOATS IN LIBERIA FOR TRANSPORTATION TO OCEAN FREIGHTERS

From the Firestone plantations in Liberia comes an ever-increasing supply of the world's finest rubber. Money saved here and in manufacturing and distribution enable Firestone to sell a safer, first-quality tire at lower prices.

Why FIRESTONE MAKES A SAFER TIRE AT A LOWER PRICE

IN THE Firestone Standard Tire, you get extra value in the form of extra safety. Firestone can build a first-quality tire made of top grade materials and sell it for less money, because Firestone controls rubber and cotton supplies at their sources, manufactures with greater efficiency and distributes at lower cost.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST BLOWOUTS—eight extra pounds of rubber are added to every 100 pounds of cord by the Firestone patented Gum-Dipping process.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST PUNCTURES—because under the tread are two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST SKIDDING—because the tread is scientifically designed.

YOU GET LONGER NON-SKID MILEAGE because of the extra tough, long-wearing tread.

Join the Firestone SAVE A LIFE Campaign today by letting the Firestone Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply & Service Store equip your car with a set of new Firestone Standard Tires—today's top tire value.

DON'T RISK YOUR LIFE ON SMOOTH WORN TIRES! DO YOU KNOW

THAT last year highway accidents cost the lives of more than 38,000 men, women and children—and a million more were injured?

THAT more than 40,000 of these deaths and injuries were caused directly by punctures, blowouts and skidding due to smooth, worn, unsafe tires?

At right is a section cut from a new Firestone tire. Note the thick, non-skid protection against skidding, blowouts and punctures. Come in and see a demonstration.

At left is a section cut from a smooth, worn tire, with non-skid protection worn off. Tires in this condition are liable to punctures, blowouts and skidding.

Storm Havoc Not Seen In Hybrid Fields

Like all other activities of life, farming always will be a survival of the fittest.

Farmers of Will County, can take advantage of the convenient opportunity of visiting the Will County Hybrid Seed fields on the Thomson Farm, where the outstanding High-Yielding Pfister Hybrid is being grown with a selected pollinator and adapted for the climate and soil conditions of the Will County Region.

This field is located on Lincoln Highway, (U. S. 30) ½ mile west of the intersection of U. S. 45, or turn up the farm road leading west of 45, about forty rods south of the picnic grove entrance and drive ½ mile to the first farmstead on the left. One has at this season the best opportunity of becoming familiar with the crossing operations that make farm hybrid seed.
